U of A dean apologizes for cribbed speech

Dr. Philip Barker said there was no excuse for his 'lapse in judgment'

The focus at convocation ceremonies shifted from pride to plagiarism yesterday as the University of Alberta struggled to deal with a dean who admitted stealing part of his inspirational speech to future doctors.

While the school said it would use "due diligence" in the handling of Dr. Philip Bakers address to medical school graduates, students reacted with everything from resigned shrugs to outright indignation.

"I don't even care to see him here anymore," said Hart Stadnick, adjusting his cap and gown before receiving his masters degree in lab medicine.

"I think he should either step down or be removed and, if that doesn't happen, I think it looks bad on the university."

Moments before she was to address yesterday's graduating class, university president Indira Samarasekera simply said the matter will be handled fairly.

"The University of Alberta undertakes fair process and due diligence in all of its affairs, and that's what we're doing right now."

Baker wrote a letter on Sunday to the graduating class of 2011 in which he apologized for his banquet speech Friday night, saying he deeply regretted what he did.

Blow away dandelion, don't spread your weeds

Dandelions are on the rise in Calgary, as are the volume of complaint calls coming in to 3-1-1, a city information hotline.

As of yesterday, 1,080 complaint calls related to weeds had been placed, according to Bill Bruce, director of Animal and Bylaw Services.

Bruce said that number is up from last year. "It will pick up. Just looking at the city, it will pick up," he said.

James Borrow, integrated pest management lead for the city's parks department said they are working to combat the dandelions but it's difficult to keep up.

He said they do weed counts in public fields and parks, and should a certain area exceed the weed threshold, it will be treated.

"But with almost 11,000 hectares of land having parks, we cannot be in any given park instantaneously, so we're not everywhere treating every dandelion," said Borrow.

As far as private property is concerned, Bruce said he no longer has no authority to order the eradication of dandelions.

"I can still deal with the weeds that are listed by the province, but not dandelions." KATIE TURNER

Breast contest begets outrage

Winner to receive $10,000 breast augmentation procedure next month

Registration opened yesterday

JEREMY NOLAIS
@METRONEWS.CA

Buzz was stirred yesterday over a new Calgary radio contest offering breast augmentation as its top prize, with some deeming it shameful and immature.

The "Breast Summer Ever," launched by 90.3 Amp Radio in partnership with Desperados nightclub, asks local hopefuls to upload a photo of themselves and provide written evidence of why they deserve to go under the knife for a procedure valued at $10,000.

The radio station then plans to select 10 finalists in early July and have them compete online for the most votes.

Jane Drover, a women's literature professor at Mount Royal University, was not impressed with Amp's latest idea.

"It's part and parcel of a shift towards women-shaming in the West," she said. "It also seems to be shamelessly insensitive to vast numbers of women that are dying daily of breast cancer."

Kris Mazurak, Amp's program director, said the station runs numerous contests throughout the year, but wouldn't speculate on whether criticism was warranted.

"We are providing a prize that many women may not be able to afford," he added. "If they choose to enter, this is what they have a chance to win.

Photo session

- All of the contest finalists will take part in a professional photo session. A winner will be chosen by July 20.
- This is the first time a competition of this nature has been launched by Amp Radio.

Calgary to host bike festival

Cyclepalooza, a week-long biking festival comes to Calgary June 17.

"Calgary has a very vibrant cycling community and we wanted a way to connect that community together," Sean Carter, an organizer for the event said.

The event has grown rapidly, and Carter hopes the growth encourages bike events year around.

"We wanted to get one event per day during the week, and since then we now have 43 events. We're excited to get cyclists out and about over the course of the week," Carter added.

The celebration begins June 17 with a kickoff party in Inglewood at 4:00 pm.

Air Canada strike leaves fliers confused

Calgarians flying Air Canada were left unsure of their future travel plans after the airline's customer service agents walked off the job early this morning.

A spokesman from the Canadian Auto Workers union, which represents the 3,800 striking employees, says pensions and wages were key sticking points.

Union president Ken Lewenza had said earlier there was a "huge gap" between the airline and the union on those two issues.

Dave Kavanagh, who was connecting through Calgary was flying home to Ottawa after a vacation in Alaska yesterday.

"I hope I make it to Ottawa OK. Wouldn't want to spoil a month-long vacation by not arriving home on time," he said.

Air Canada's website does provide travellers a contingency plan.

A website message from Duncan Dee, Air Canada's executive vice- president and CEO, indicated the airline is ready for any outcome.

"In the event of a strike, we will continue to operate a full schedule and all bookings will be honoured," the website stated. "Management has been trained to provide assistance at the airports that would be affected."

Travellers use pot vaporizer to ingest drug aboard flight

JEREMY NOLAIS
@METRONEWS.CA

Calgary travellers likely made their way into the Canadian record books earlier this month.

As first reported yesterday on metronews.ca/calgary, the group of four boarded a WestJet flight June 2 with a marijuana vaporizer and proceeded to use it throughout the flight without any hassle from flight attendants or fellow passengers.

Coincidentally, they were heading to a conference regarding medical marijuana use in Toronto.

"I just used it in my seat," said Lisa Kirkman. "They don't produce any smoke. That's kind of the reason this can be done. There's no combustion involved."

All four members are licensed to use marijuana for medicinal purposes.

Kirkman also used the drug while waiting to board to ease nausea. She had recently undergone intestinal surgery and was in a great deal of discomfort.

"I wouldn't have been able to go without it," she said. "It's a long flight."

Representatives with Transportation Canada said this was the first time they had been alerted to a vaporizer being used aboard a plane and were looking into the matter.

WestJet is waiting on confirmation from the organization on whether the practice is acceptable, spokesperson Robert Palmer said.

Kirkman did call ahead to WestJet to confirm with a representative at WestJet's call centre before bringing the vaporizer onboard.

"I wasn't breaking any laws," she said. "If you can use an inhaler on the plane there's no reason why I can't use my vaporizer."

BOARD GAME

Teacher layoffs looming

Dozens of teachers could be handed their walking papers next year if school trustees approve a preliminary budget that would see 331 positions slashed. Of those lost positions, 279 teaching jobs could be affected.

The Calgary Board of Education says 100 teachers have announced plans to retire at year's end and dozens more have plans to relocate.

Despite this, the board is scrambling to make arrangements for roughly 170 probationary teachers by helping them get work through exchange programs and international partnerships, said chief superintendent Naomi Johnson.

"What we have done is build a bridging strategy," she said. "We are going to keep them as close to us as we can. To be honest, our retirements and resignations are down this year, so we weren't able to close the gap."

In April, Johnson was optimistic that layoffs could be avoided, like last year, when 200 positions were lost without any pink slips being handed out.

Trustees will vote on the budget today.

Don't fuel the fire

Deputy chief warns against butting out smokes in planters

TODD VAUGHAN
CALGARY@METRONEWS.CA

More than six fires that swept through more than eight Calgary homes were sparked by careless disposal of cigarette butts in planters, Brad Lorne, the deputy fire chief, said yesterday on a media tour of two southwest homes destroyed in Bridlewood on Thursday.

"This was a preventable fire that was caused by a cigarette being put out in a peat-moss planter on the front deck," Lorne said.

The fire quickly spread into the first home, then into the neighbour's house on the right side.

To make matters worse, the homes were too close together to begin with, Lorne said, adding that the department wants changes to the building code.

"We want developers to spread houses at least 1.5 metres apart, rather than the current code, which only has to be 1.2 metres."

Lorne says the fire spread through the soffits, which were vented and allowed the fire to spread into the attic of the neighbour's house

"It's frustrating to see, for fire officials, and also means that multiple families are now homeless."

Play it safe

A few facts from the Calgary Fire Department:

- Non-vinyl siding takes 20 minutes longer to burn than vinyl, which allows more time for the fire department to arrive.
- You have three minutes to get out of a burning house on your own. After that, you'll need help from firefighters.
- It takes one minute for a person to sense that a fire has started.
- It takes seven minutes, on average, for firefighters to arrive after a 911 call.

White pages obsolete

Phone books — at least the white ones — have been almost completely phased out of Calgary homes and businesses.

Just over a year after Yellow Pages Group announced Canadians in major urban centres would have to request delivery of the white pages, less than five per cent of local residents have done so.

"It's been pretty much what we expected, which is why we decided to move them to a distribution by request," said spokesperson Fiona Story.

Calgary retail manager Elysse Berg wasn't surprised to learn of the decline in white-page use. She personally hasn't cracked a phone book in at least three years.

"You have absolutely no use for a paper copy of it," she said. "You can find everything online now."

One click

- Yellow Pages Group has seen a spike in traffic to its online phone directory, 411.ca.
- Roughly 30 per cent of the online traffic comes from mobile devices.
- The organization also reports it has reduced paper consumption by 25 per cent in recent years.
- To opt in for the white pages or opt out of the Yellow Pages visit ypg.com/delivery.

▶ Stacks of white pages like these are few and far between in Calgary nowadays.

Berg added that online services allow for a bit of error when she is not completely clear on the exact spelling of someone's name.

Story said low usage numbers for the white pages have been consistent across Canada, but added the Yellow Pages remain a little more useful because they allow people to browse by subject.

A fog of nervous energy seemed to sit over Vancouver yesterday several hours ahead of puck drop.

People were hopeful to see their team win its first Stanley Cup, but anxious, especially given the 8-1 and 4-0 trouncings the team suffered when they were run out of Boston in Games 3 and 4.

Downpours throughout the morning did little to dampen spirits and as game time approached, people in Canucks sweaters began sprouting up on sidewalks, and at noon lineups had begun forming outside pubs.

Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson said the city was anticipating crowds similar in size to the 100,000 who celebrated downtown after Game 5.

Sex-trade laws on trial

- Representatives for 19 groups will argue for and against the law

NATHAN DENETTE/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Dominatrix Terri-Jean Bedford holds a riding crop as she speaks to media outside the Ontario Appeal Court in Toronto yesterday.

A five-judge Appeal Court panel held the federal government's feet to the fire yesterday, grilling its lawyer about an assertion that prostitution laws aren't putting sex workers in danger.

Last year, an Ontario judge struck down the laws against keeping a common bawdy house, communicating for the purposes of prostitution and living on the avails of the trade.

Superior Court Judge Susan Himel found the laws were contributing to the danger faced by prostitutes, forcing them to choose between their liberty and their safety.

Sex-trade workers argue the laws prevent them from working indoors where it's safer, taking time to talk to a potential client to assess the risk they pose and hiring bodyguards.

The federal and Ontario governments are appealing the ruling, arguing there is no obligation to maximize the safety of prostitutes, because it is not a constitutionally protected right to engage in the sex trade.

Ottawa's lawyer, Michael Morris, argued that prostitution itself is dangerous and the harms are posed not by the laws, but by violent pimps and johns. Morris had a tough go in front of the judges, as they closely scrutinized and at times appeared incredulous at the government's claims.

"I find it hard to understand why it's not self-evident that these provisions harm the ability to carry out prostitution safely," said Justice David Doherty.

Smuggling ring smoked out

African diplomat and wife involved with Serbian crime ring, Romanian officials say Crossed border weekly

Prosecutors found 1,800 cartons of smuggled cigarettes yesterday in the car of an African diplomat's wife, who claimed diplomatic immunity and only left the vehicle when police smashed its windows.

The woman and her husband, the second counsellor at the Congolese embassy in Belgrade, are suspected of working with a Serbian crime ring that smuggled tax-free cigarettes from Montenegro to Romania.

After a two-hour standoff, officers smashed the windows and discovered the cigarettes stashed in the car, which had been specially altered to transport the contraband. Some cartons were stacked where the back seat had been and covered with a black cloth to avoid detection.

The woman, identified as Esther Pascaline, and her Serbian driver were detained. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE TRUTH ABOUT LIFE IN A CUBICLE

SHE SAYS ...

JESSICA NAPIER
METRO

I used to think Office Space was a hilarious comedy about disgruntled co-workers at a fictional software company. After working at a desk job for a little more than a year now, I have come to realize that the film is actually an extremely factual documentary.

While watching workplace-centric sitcoms and movies prepared me for the murderous feelings I would develop toward the photocopier, there are some realities of office life that you just can't anticipate until you start working in the trenches — or, in this case, the cubicle. Here are 10 things I've learned so far:

1. While the average workday lasts eight hours, you will only need to put in approximately three hours of real work. The rest of your day will be spent making to-do lists and looking at celebrity blogs.

2. You will be expected to eat a lot of cake. In order to avoid offending your co-workers, you will have to fake it with a slice of bad store-bought vanilla cake about once a month.

"The time it takes to complete an assignment has nothing to do with your own productivity but is entirely reliant on the number of bosses you have and how likely they are to disagree with one another."

3. If your name is Jessica, someone will call you "Jennifer" at least once a week.

4. The coffee brewed by the communal machine in your office kitchen is the worst cup of coffee you will ever taste. However, after refusing to drink it for a month or two you will eventually give in because … well, it's free.

5. When you buy yourself flowers, everyone will assume you have a secret admirer. If you like to be entertained by gullible co-workers, you will run with it and invent a fictional lover named Carlos who just loves to spoil you.

6. At some point, your boss will want you to befriend him or her on Facebook. You will spend two hours untagging photos of yourself posing as a drunken (insert wildly inappropriate theme-party costume here) before you begrudgingly confirm the friend request.

7. The time it takes to complete an assignment has nothing to do with your own productivity but is entirely reliant on the number of bosses you have and how likely they are to disagree with one another.

8. Even if your co-workers earn more money than you, they will still steal your food.

9. The IT manager is your best friend. Especially if you have a habit of spilling water on your keyboard or downloading viruses.

10. When you write lengthy emails with flowery language that would have made your grad school professor weep with pride, no one will care. After one month, all of your emails will contain only two words: "See attached."

Worth mentioning

LONDON. A 40-year-old American man living in Scotland said yesterday he is sorry for posing as a Syrian lesbian blogger who offered vivid accounts of life amid revolt and repression in Damascus, a hoax that has exposed the difficulty of sifting truth from fiction online.

Tom MacMaster said he created the fictional persona of Amina Arraf and the Gay Girl in Damascus blog to draw attention to conditions in a Middle East convulsed by change.

"I never meant to hurt anyone," the Edinburgh University grad student wrote in an apology on the blog. The university said it had suspended MacMaster's computer privileges while it investigated whether he had breached its rules.

Gay-rights activists and bloggers say MacMaster has endangered real people who are trying to tell their stories in authoritarian societies.

"He completely stole the limelight of real LGBT bloggers and activists in the Middle East and diverted it in a negative way," said Dan Littauer of the website Gay Middle East.

Miami suffers premature celebration

A full-page ad that ran in yesterday's Miami Herald reads "Congratulations Miami" next to photos of Heat championship T-shirts and hats from Macy's. One T-shirt reads "Heat 2011 NBA Finals Champions" and the ad shows the Heat's logo on a hat with the words "NBA Champions."

The ad ran under a story about the Heat's loss.

The newspaper issued a correction and apologized for any inconvenience.

A Macy's spokeswoman called it an unfortunate error and apologized to Heat fans.

Report suggests website losing ground in Canada
Developing countries picking up the slack

The head of Facebook Canada says there's still plenty of room for the social networking giant to grow north of the border, but some new numbers suggest that may not be the case.

A report from trend-tracker Inside Facebook says the number of Canadians using the site has dropped by about 1.52 million to 16.6 million.

Canada's numbers reflect a global trend suggesting that Facebook use in a country seems to plateau when 50 per cent of the population is signed up. Some 49.27 per cent of Canadians use Facebook, says another trend tracker, Socialbakers.

But Jordan Banks, managing director at Facebook Canada, says he doesn't believe Facebook use in Canada is slowing.

"I don't think we're plateauing at all," he said in an interview this year. "When you take a look at ... how many times they come in a given month to how much time they spend, pages viewed — it continues to grow at a very rapid rate," he said.

Maple bids for TSX

Maple Group, the Canadian consortium looking to buy TMX Group Inc., has launched its $3.7-billion hostile bid, pitching it as a stronger platform for growth compared to a friendly merger with the London Stock Exchange Group.

Calling the Toronto exchange a global leader, Luc Bertrand, Maple Group spokesman and vice-chairman of National Bank Financial, said, "Our vision at Maple is to build on (its) strengths rather than shore up the LSE's weaknesses."

For the Maple deal to go forward, TMX shareholders must vote down the proposed merger with the London exchange at a meeting on June 30.

Air Canada workers walk off the job

Air Canada's customer-service agents and other airport workers are on strike after their union and the airline failed to reach an agreement.

A spokesman from the Canadian Auto Workers union, which represents the 3,800 striking employees, says pensions and wages were key sticking points.

Union president Ken Lewenza had said earlier there was a "huge gap" between the airline and the union on those two issues.

Air Canada says it has a contingency plan in place to continue operating a full schedule even as the strike goes ahead.

The airline urges passengers to check its website because a high volume of calls could make it a long wait to get through to its call centres, which were largely operated by employees who have walked off the job.

The union aired its concerns on pensions well before the strike began.

The airline had proposed that new hires would receive defined contribution pension plans instead of the defined benefit plans current employees have.

The company's unions agreed to accept numerous concessions worth billions to help the company to survive, but they insisted their defined benefit pension plans be saved.

Union officials have said the airline wants also to gut the pensions of current workers. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Strike is 'digging to the bone': Canada Post

Urban Canadians aren't getting letters today, but the union representing striking postal workers wants you to know that wasn't its decision.

Canada Post is limiting letter delivery in cities to Monday, Wednesday and Friday because the postal service has lost $65 million since the strike began, officials said yesterday.

"They are digging to the bone. They are pushing major customers to go to the competition," Canada Post spokesman Jon Hamilton said.

But the Canadian Union of Postal Workers countered that the limited delivery will disrupt mail service to more people in one day than the union's rotating strikes have in total so far.

Calling the move a "partial lockout," CUPW president Denis Lemelin accused Canada Post of trying to force Ottawa to legislate the postal workers back to work.

But as of yesterday, the government appeared to have ruled out back-to-work legislation for now.

Expressing concern about the impact of the dispute on the economy, the parliamentary secretary to federal Labour Minister Lisa Raitt said the government is still hoping for a negotiated settlement.

Face time with Jim Carrey

On a frigid set with real penguins, the Canadian comic returns to his famous facial mugging It's still all just play for Carrey

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS IN LOS ANGELES

After years of making a fortune off of his elastic face, Jim Carrey is still finding new ways to manipulate it — though not all of them are intentional.

"My face kind of operates on its own nowadays. It just kind of does what it wants to do. Sometimes it's appropriate and sometimes it's not," he says. "Sometimes in the editing room, we'll go, 'That's not human. We want to take that out.'"

After a few live-action roles that required less facial manipulation, Carrey returns to the type of mugging that made him famous in his latest, Mr. Popper's Penguins, which pits his neat-freak corporate real estate broker against six new waddling house guests — played by a mix of animatronics, CGI stand-ins and real, live penguins. It was a working environment more than a little challenging.

"The set was so cold that I was fighting pneumonia the entire time," he says. "Then there was going outside when it was 75 or 80 degrees in five layers of clothing and a parka."

Acting challenges aside, Carrey cops to an affinity for his flightless co-stars. "I think that's why we love penguins, because they don't belong anywhere," he says. "They're wobbly and vulnerable, and they're not really fish and they're not really birds, and that's how I feel. Probably a lot of people do."

A return to more physical comedy also meant a return to childhood for the 49-year-old actor. "I find I'm still doing things and little tricks and fun things that I created when I was 10 years old," he says. "The play you do when you're a kid is so super-important."

Intense

Jim Carrey has become an intense user, with more than 3 million followers on Twitter. Here are some recent postings.

Owen Wilson and Jason Sudeikis click as bored buddies Rick and Fred, who are living happy family lives in Providence, R.I.

It's when Rick and Fred are granted the "hall pass" of the title – one week to do whatever they want – that the movie descends to gross-out depths, with predictable and dull results.

Emma Watson is preparing for the next chapter of her life. The Harry Potter actress acknowledges that she needs to find her way out of the bubble, which she describes in part as the safe world of life on the set of the successful film franchise.

Watson says in the July issue of Vogue magazine that she wants to explore more of her creative side, and cites Patti Smith as a role model.

"I want to live like Patti," she said of the singer-songwriter, visual artist and poet.

Watson plays Hermione Granger for last time when the franchise's last film, Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2, is released in July.

The best medicine?

Project Commando gets the blood pumping with a big dose of its laughter therapy program The non-profit group helps support those with chronic disease, in severe pain

CELIA MILNE
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

They're not sick jokes, but rather jokes for the sick.

A new, non-profit company called Patient Commando is making sure that stories about health struggles — both sad and funny — get told and listened to. Laughter therapy has long been known as a powerful tool to release tension and get the blood pumping more efficiently.

In Patient Commando's promotional video, a comedic actor spoofs everyone's worst hospital nightmare.

Donning his hat, socks and shoes, he tries to make a dignified exit, but his hospital gown isn't done up and his bare bum jiggles hilariously for all to see.

Comic relief — through laugh therapy and live theatre shows — is one of the ways that Patient Commando helps support people who have chronic disease, terminal disease or are suffering from bereavement.

"I'm interested in the expression of the story. Listen to the patient voice."
TORONTO FOUNDER OF PATIENT COMMANDO ZAL PRESS

The company also encourages people to tell their stories.

"I'm interested in the expression of the story," says Toronto founder of Patient Commando Zal Press. "Listen to the patient voice."

Press himself has struggled with the painful symptoms of Crohn's disease, an inflammation of the intestines, for 30 years.

"It feels like a cat trapped inside my gut trying to claw its way out," he tells Metro.

Press gave up his job selling home decor to start Patient Commando.

The company will be conducting public "laugh therapy" workshops at the Centre for Social Innovation in Toronto from June 15 to July 30.

By the numbers

Recent studies show that autism rates on the rise.

Statistics The study in Pediatrics says the number of children diagnosed with autism has grown from an estimated 0.8 cases per 1,000 in 1983 to 11 per 1,000 in 2007.

Testing for autism not an exact science

Not enough evidence for routine screening for autism, researchers say

Not enough sound evidence exists for routine screening of all preschoolers to determine whether they have autism, researchers said Monday.

In a paper published in the online edition of the journal Pediatrics, a team at McMaster University in Hamilton said that screening and diagnostic tools are still being developed and revised, and no therapies have a "curative outcome or well-established efficacy to change the course of the condition."

More research is needed because none of the screening tests currently available has "high sensitivity, high specificity and high predictive value ... in a population-wide screening program," wrote Dr. Jan Willem Gorter of the CanChild Centre for Childhood Disability Research, and colleagues.

But the American Academy of Pediatrics has taken a different stance, recommending that screening for autism be incorporated into routine medical practice. Gorter said in an interview that he hasn't heard of any similar advice from the Canadian counterpart organization.

"If you want to implement such a program you would like to know if you do more good than harm. That actually was our starting point, to go to the literature and find out more about screening," he said.

"Clearly autism is a developmental disability that has a huge impact on children, lives and families and society, so that would be a good reason for screening."
DR. JAN WILLEM GORTER OF THE CANCHILD CENTRE FOR CHILDHOOD DISABILITY RESEARCH

"Clearly autism is a developmental disability that has a huge impact on children, lives and families and society, so that would be a good reason for screening. Then we looked at what the tests are and what we know about the tests for screening for autism and found there was not much literature supporting that, and you wonder if you do more good than harm."

He also expressed concern about the impact on parents and children if there is a false positive or false negative for autism spectrum disorder.

▶ She's like Gandhi, except hot.

Set your alarm to happy time

Remember to reconnect with the desire to be happy and tune into a positive perspective as soon as you wake up. Set an alarm on your phone saying, 'Today happiness is my primary function' and have it on snooze at morning, midday and in the evening.

Practice the 'F' word

Forgiveness is the key to personal development and the tool that will guide you to go past resentment and not stay hung up on negative thoughts. It may sound tough, but the first step is to identify the people you resent and you need to forgive and let go of the negative situation. This resentment is lowering your energy so moving on will give you the impetus to move forward.

Meditate

Meditation isn't about big Buddhas, spirituality and fluffy pillows — it doesn't have to be done one 'way'. It can be as simple as sitting and listening to a song that makes you feel good as you focus on your deep breath.

Walking can also be a powerful tool for meditation: breathe in on one step and out on the other. The idea is to tune into that peace so that we can reconnect with the loving presence in us and make decisions based on loving choices.

Be grateful

Make a list of the things in life you are grateful for, focusing on the good stuff like your family, paycheck and sunny weather.

Focusing on what we have, not what we don't have, unleashes the presence of our inner guidance, our 'ing'.

Focus on appreciation and gratitude and you will attract an abundance of high-level experiences such as a wave of energy and creative ideas.

Jump!

Jumping on a trampoline is invigorating, brings you balance and makes you feel like a child again. Moving is a big part of happiness and ultimately finding a physical activity that ignites inner spark, whether that's dancing or running, is vital.

Limit your daily intake of negative news

Between the Japanese Earthquake and Osama bin Laden's death and consequent terrorist threats, it seems like we've already hit our bad news threshold for 2011. Pick and choose the news you read. Instead of going to world news or main headlines, read the Life and Style or Sports section. Read your news at lunchtime, as you are less vulnerable to the impact of bad news on your mood at that time of the day.

WWGD?

If you're being wrongfully attacked by someone and are feeling defencelessness, ask yourself this, 'What would Gandhi do?' Expressing anger toward them will not make you feel any better so when in that moment try and remind yourself that fighting back isn't going to help. Focus on looking for and finding peace in a non-peaceful situation.

30 days of no gossip

When we gossip about other people we lower our energy field. Hang out with positive people that make you feel good and share you energetic space.

If your energy levels are low, you will attract low-leveled people.

What you do

1. Stand on your hands and knees in a table top position making sure your knees are set directly below your hips and your wrists, elbows and shoulders are in line and perpendicular to the floor.
2. As you inhale, lift your sitting bones and chest towards the ceiling, allowing your belly to sink towards the floor. Lift your head to look straight forward. Beginners can protect their neck by broadening across the shoulder blades and drawing the shoulders down away from the ears.
3. Exhale, coming back to neutral tabletop position on your hands and knees. Repeat 10 to 20 times.

Benefits

- Stretches the front torso, neck, abdominal organs and spine.
- Provides a gentle yet firm massage to the spine, kidneys and abdominal organs
- Aids digestion and elimination.
- Opens up the hips, eases neck and shoulder stress and tension.

Is it possible for the Sloppy Joe to be even sloppier? Yup

These Sloppy Joes start with the intensely flavoured base of tomatoes, beef and pig products. Then they get spooned onto toasted deli rolls and topped with provolone cheese and tossed under the broiler for a minute or so. The result is a beefy sandwich that will leave everyone at the table satisfied.

Preparation:

1. In saucepan over medium-high, combine olive oil, garlic, onion, paprika, basil and oregano. Sauté until onion is tender and seasonings fragrant, about 5 minutes.
2. Add ground beef and prosciutto. Sauté until beef is cooked through and prosciutto begins to brown, about 8 minutes. Add tomato sauce, ketchup and vinegar and bring to a simmer. Stir in Parmesan, season with salt and pepper.
3. Set oven to broil. Arrange bottom halves of rolls on a baking sheet, then spoon some of the sloppy Joe mixture onto each. Top each with a slice of provolone, then broil just until cheese starts to melt. Top with the other halves of the rolls.

You might drive right by Indonesian Kitchen.

It's located in the corner of Penbrooke Plaza inside the Calgary Sweet House and Restaurant, with a tiny sign in the window announcing its presence.

The restaurant also serves Indian food, but we stay with the Indonesian menu, which reflects Indonesian cuisine's diverse cultural influences.

For a starter, we try croquettes (two for $4) reminiscent of a Shepherd's Pie with a crispy outside.

Unfortunately, during our visit, the restaurant is sold out of Sayur Asam, a tamarind-based soup with peanuts, corn and jackfruit ($5).

We share chicken in a rich, coconut curry sauce (Sayur Asam, $11) with mild, yet nicely balanced flavours. The shrimp satay (Satay Udang, $14) comes with six skewers and a barbecue sauce with strong overtones of shrimp paste.

The entrees are great with fluffy coconut rice ($3) and freshly squeezed pineapple juice ($3)

On my next visit, I want to try the goat-lamb Sudanese-style dry stew and the tempeh sautéed in sambal sauce.

YES, YOU CAN FIND LOVE ON A BOAT

▶ Dino and Jennifer

Names:
Dino, 45, and Jennifer, 39

Hometown:
Burnaby, B.C.

Together since:
2007

Their story:

My fantastic husband, Dino, and I (Jennifer) met on a blues cruise on a gorgeous, hot and sunny Canada Day in 2007.

It was a scenic four-hour boat tour around Vancouver's stunning False Creek and English Bay.

The day's entertainment featured a band I'd wanted to see called Brickhouse.

I was there with a girlfriend and while she was off mingling, I wandered up to the front of the boat to drink in the view.

There were so many people already lining the bow's edge that there wasn't room for me and I had to hang back.

All of a sudden a very handsome man with a great smile (Dino) turned around and said, 'Come on up!' and scooched over to make room for me.

Sparks flew that night, and just over a year and a half later, on my birthday, he proposed!

We had a wonderful wedding day in June 2010 and are enjoying every adventure that comes our way.

I can't stand my hubby's friends and he can't stand mine. What should we do? Ditch them?

Angela says ...

Every relationship is different and comes with its own set of dynamics.

I think it's perfectly healthy for each partner to have their own group of friends, whose company they enjoy separately.

Hopefully you also have some mutual friends.

If not, get out there and make some.

Derek says...

To Angela's point, hanging out separately with friends is totally healthy — so long as you don't start ragging on your partner after she or he has been out with them.

That will lead you down the path to problems.

Besides, if you're going to start knocking on someone, better to do it together.

It's more fun that way.

BE A FOOD SCROOGE

FUN AND FRUGAL

LESLEY SCORGIE
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

Two weeks ago I met the brains behind a novel and frugal online grocery business, Tim Ray of Foodscrooge.com.

Inspired by websites such as Groupon.com, this dynamic 30-year-old entrepreneur developed the foodscrooge.com concept while completing his Queen's MBA entrepreneurship course.

The business was formally launched in March 2011 and thus far, it's a hit!

The big idea behind foodscrooge.com is to sell large quantities of discounted premium quality foods, such as T-bone steaks or tortellini, directly to the consumer from the manufacturer.

Many products are organic and produced locally. The discounts are offered because of the manufacturer has either overstocked inventory or wants to promote a particular product.

Foodscrooge.com subscribers get a notification of a weekly sale item by email. They buy the product online at a 40 to 80 per cent discount to retail price and then pick it up from a local grocery retail location that foodscrooge.com has partnered with. The consumer saves big bucks simply by storing their bulk purchases in a freezer.

If you're into bulk buying or are hosting a barbecue this summer, check out foodscrooge.com.

Give Dad a memorable day

ON MONEY

ALISON GRIFFITHS
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

What a difference a generation makes. Back when my kids were small, Father's Day was under or overdone pancakes, handmade cards, a walk in the park and an extra glass of wine at dinner.

Now, we're talking barbecues, iPads, golf clubs and other products that put a serious dent in your wallet. With personal, non-mortgage debt per capita hitting an all-time high of $26,000, it's time for one word. Don't.

How much sense does it make to take on debt for a gift that says I love you, to the father or man in your life? None at all.

On the other hand, traditional cheaper gifts aren't necessarily appreciated. According to a recent TD Credit Cards survey, 65 per cent of dads are unimpressed with yet another tie on Father's Day.

Joining the list of Dad's day clichés (read, please don't buy one for me) are coffee mugs and DIY tools. A tool can be cool but if Dad is struggling to keep up around the house he might not want a reminder that there's more to be done.

So what's a daughter, son or wife to do? My vote goes to a picnic complete with a fun activity such as catch, Frisbee, a putting contest, an old-fashioned game of horseshoes or a bike ride.

Roast a chicken or fish fillets the night before, add a potato or pasta and green salad, throw in a fresh baguette with a soft, extra creamy cheese, grab some sinful cookies at a local bakery or make a batch of brownies — and you're done!

That's it! No shopping. No mall. No pressure. And we do feel pressure over Father's Day. The TD survey discovered that nearly 40 per cent of Canadian sons, daughters and wives are stressed over finding an appropriate and affordable gift. So give yourself a break and the man in your life a memorable (and inexpensive) day.

Get creative

Make this Father's Day one to remember.

- Give him a unique experience.
- Take him to a place he's never been.
- Offer him a taste he's never tried.

Majority of Canadians not prepared to cover costs of a critical illness: Survey

A new survey suggests many Canadians aren't taking the steps needed to financially prepare for health-care costs that may crop up in the event of a critical illness.

28.4% 28.4 per cent of respondents said job loss would be more devastating than a critical illness diagnosis.

Among more than 2,000 adults participating in the Desjardins Financial Security Health Survey, three-quarters of respondents said they feel the health-care system won't cover all costs related to treating a critical illness. The survey found 64 per cent of respondents are worried they wouldn't be able to afford to pay the balance for treatment. Respondents also addressed the issue of potential financial shortfalls during recovery from a major illness. Among those polled, 53 per cent felt they would be able to cover everyday expenses such as food, housing, transportation and clothing, or pay monthly bills (48.7 per cent). THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Boston's Milan Lucic scores a goal against Vancouver goalie Roberto Luongo in the first period last night.

Bruins chase Luongo from the net with three early goals, send series back to Vancouver

It was a short night for Vancouver Canucks goaltender Roberto Luongo.

Luongo was pulled after allowing three quick goals in the first period of Game 6 of the Stanley Cup final against the Boston Bruins last night.

Boston won the game 5-2, forcing a Game 7 tomorrow night in Vancouver.

The Bruins chased Luongo at 8:35 after Andrew Ference's power-play goal made the score 3-0. Luongo had previously allowed goals 35 seconds apart by Brad Marchand and Milan Lucic.

Vancouver coach Alain Vigneault made the decision to pull Luongo after he stopped five of eight shots.

BRUINS	CANUCKS
5	2

"I just felt it was the thing to do at the time," Vigneault said.

Vigneault indicated that Luongo would start Game 7 in Vancouver, where the goaltender has been excellent.

"I haven't talked to him. He knows he's going back in next game. He's going to be real good," Vigneault said.

Luongo said he was ready to move on from his poor performance.

"I've got to believe in myself, right? That's a big component of bouncing back and playing a good game," Luongo said. "So we're going to put what happened tonight behind us as soon as possible and get ready for obviously what is going to be a dream — as far as playing in a Game 7 of a Stanley Cup final."

Backup Cory Schneider replaced Luongo and gave up another goal in short order and the Canucks trailed 4-0 after 20 minutes. Schneider finished the game, stopping 30 of 32 shots.

Boston goaltender Tim Thomas stopped 36 of 38 shots and was named the game's first star.

"He's been in his zone through the whole playoffs," Boston coach Claude Julien said. "You can barely count on one hand the bad goals he's given up in the whole playoffs. We all know that teams that have won the Stanley Cup have had unbelievable goaltending. We feel like we've got that."

While Luongo's struggles have been limited to the East Coast, the Sedin twins finally showed life for perhaps the first time in the series. The NHL's last two scoring champions have done a monumental disappearing act in the final, although they doubled their point total for the entire series when Daniel Sedin assisted on Henrik Sedin's backhand in the third period for just the second goal of the series by Vancouver's league-best power play, which dropped to 2 for 31.

Daniel Sedin, the NHL scoring champion, added an assist on Maxim Lapierre's third-period goal, giving him four points in the series.

King James still without NBA crown

LeBron's most scrutinized season ends with puzzlingly lacklustre finals

There were seven seconds left in the NBA season and the Dallas Mavericks were beginning their championship celebration when LeBron James started slowly walking toward Dwyane Wade, his right hand outstretched.

A quick embrace, and with that, the off-season began.

For the Miami Heat, it's time to regroup.

Changing locales did not bring change to the ultimate outcome for James, whose eighth NBA season and first in Miami ended the same as his seven in Cleveland — without a championship. He took a swipe at those who criticized him and the Heat, saying the quality of their lives will not improve because he failed to win a title.

"There's no distractions that can stop me from trying to chase an NBA championship," James said Sunday night, after Game 6.

The Heat had the homecourt edge, were perceived as favourites and came into the finals flying high after needing only 11 games to get past Boston and Chicago.

Then ... thud.

A Game 1 win was followed by a Game 2 collapse, and the series was never the same as Dallas won four of the final five contests.

Dallas rejoices

The Mavericks returned home yesterday, cheered by hundreds of fans celebrating the team's NBA title at Love Field airport in Dallas.

- The championship, the first in the team's 31-year history, is a breakthrough.
- The franchise was once one of the worst in the NBA and, even after owner Mark Cuban's infusion of cash, had a reputation of failing to win big games.

"There's no hiding," said Chris Bosh, who doubled over crying in the bowels of American Airlines Arena after Game 6. "In the NBA you play a series, best of seven games, usually the better team is going to win.

"So we've got a lot of work to do. We have to go back to the drawing board. It hurts to come this far and come up short."

MacLean to coach Sens, sources say

PAUL SANCYA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Paul MacLean

Detroit Red Wings assistant Paul MacLean has been hired as the new coach of the Ottawa Senators.

Two people familiar with the decision confirmed the move yesterday, speaking with The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because it had not been formally announced by the Senators. The hire was first reported by ESPN.com.

The Senators fired head coach Cory Clouston and two assistants in April after the team failed to qualify for the playoffs for the second time in three seasons.

MacLean has spent the past five years as an assistant in Detroit, helping the team win the championship in 2008. He and Wings coach Mike Babcock also worked together for two years in Anaheim, taking the Ducks to the Stanley Cup final.

MacLean spent 11 seasons in the NHL, playing in 719 games for Winnipeg, Detroit and St. Louis from 1980-91. He finished with 324 goals and 349 assists.

Prior to joining the Anaheim coaching staff in 2002, the Antigonish, N.S., native was head coach of the Quad City Mallards of the United Hockey League. He also spent time coaching minor-league teams in Kansas City and Peoria, Ill., and has been assistant coach with the Phoenix Coyotes and a scout for the St. Louis Blues.

In Ottawa, MacLean will be working for general manager Bryan Murray, his old boss in Anaheim. Murray, who recently received a three-year contract extension, has fired three coaches since he left the job himself to become GM after the Senators reached the final in 2007. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NBA enters off-season of uncertainty

As Dirk Nowitzki and Dwyane Wade traded big shots in a thrilling NBA finals, with fans tuning in at levels the league hadn't seen since the days of the Kobe-Shaq Lakers, the questions came more frequently.

How can commissioner David Stern tell all those viewers to go watch something else?

How can they shut it down now?

"It's an odd position, when the game is the best it's ever been, when the ratings are the highest they've ever been, when the excitement is the greatest it's ever (been)," players association lawyer Jeffrey Kessler said last week. "It's sort of odd to see the owners say we're going to destroy this game unless you change this whole system. Players just want to play."

When the Dallas Mavericks finished off the Miami Heat Sunday, it sent the NBA into a most uncertain off-season.

Owners and players are nowhere close on a new collective bargaining agreement to replace the one that expires June 30. Without a new deal, players say they have been told by the owners they will be locked out.

The NBA was reduced to a 50-game season by a work stoppage in 1998-99, and the loss of games is a threat now. Citing league-wide losses of about $300 million US this season, the league hasn't budged on its desire for significant changes to the financial structure, ranging from reductions in the length of contracts and the amount of guarantees, to an overhaul of the salary cap system that would prevent teams from being able to exceed it, as they can now under certain exceptions.

The championship clincher was the highest-rated Game 6 ever on ABC, in large part because of the Heat, whose star power created a must-see team.

The re-emergence of teams like the Chicago Bulls and, to a lesser extent, the New York Knicks over the last season has also piqued interest in some of the NBA's traditionally strong markets. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Today's horoscope

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to metronews.ca

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 You will be in the thick of the action today.
♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 If you make changes today it's unlikely you will be able to change back again later.
♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 The approaching eclipse suggests you will be tempted to take on someone who is, to be frank, out of your league.
♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 Steer clear of anything that might depress you today — and steer clear of people who seem to think failure is something to be accepted.
♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23 If someone challenges you today you must stand up for yourself.
♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 If you find yourself up against forces that are difficult to cope with then it might be wise to back off.
♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 This should be a fun day for you, but you might not get much work finished.
♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 You have never been one to let others take advantage of you but that does not mean they won't try.
♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 If someone stands in your way today you must shove them aside.
♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Don't change your routines or your methods simply to fit in.
♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 You may fall out with a partner or loved one over the next days.
♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20. Compromise solutions may be hard to come by.
